

About the Trainer:

Frank J. Omowale Satterwhite is a community-building specialist with a B.A. degree from Howard University, a M.A. degree from Southern Illinois University and a Ph.D. from at Stanford University.

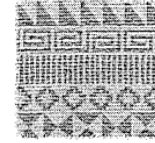

Omowale is the founder and former president of both the Community Development Institute (CDI) in Palo Alto California, and the National Community Development Institute (NCDI), in Oakland, California. NCDI is a nonprofit, technical support center whose mission is to build capacity for social change in communities of color and other underserved communities in a culturally-base way.

Omowale provides organizational development training and consultation to over 100 social justice, health/human service, community development and philanthropic organizations across the country annually. He serves on the boards of local, regional, and national organizations in the community-building field including: Applied Research Center (ARC) and Urban Habitat in Oakland, CA; CDI, Teen Home and Girls Club of the Mid-peninsula, East Palo Alto, CA; Praxis, in Washington, D.C.

Omo is the immediate past President of the Alliance for Nonprofit Management Board, in Washington, D.C. Dr. Satterwhite has also served on the East Palo Alto City Council and the San Mateo County Planning Commission.
